SOCIAL & PERSONAL

President Ephraim Katzir yesterday received members of the Central Elections Committee, headed by Justice Elihu Shalev, who presented the official voting totals of the recent elections.

President Katzir also held meetings yesterday with MK Simha Ehrlich, Prof. Nahum Salanski, a recent immigrant from the Soviet Union, and members of the central committee of the Alliance Israélite Universelle, now meeting in Jerusalem.

Arnon Sofer of Haifa University will speak on "A Visit to the USSR" at the Haifa Engineers Club, 1 p.m., today.

An Oneg Shabbat in English will be held at 9 o'clock tonight at Hachal Shivat Zion, 88 Rehov Ben-Yehuda, Tel Aviv. Tourists are invited to meet Yaakov Bar-Or, community leader, and Arie Chapman, Tour Ve'aleh, World Zionist Organization, Aliya Department.

An Oneg Shabbat in English will be held at nine o'clock tonight at Hachal Shimon in Jerusalem. Speakers will be Rabbi Leo H. Shavoyich and Ephraim Elion of the Foreign Ministry. Cantor Arye Goldberg will lead the singing of Mizmor. A Melave Malka will be held tomorrow at the same place at 9 p.m. with Rabbi David Telsner as guest speaker. Cantor Yehuda Lender will give a recital. The public is invited to both occasions.

Prof. Gus van Beek, curator of old world archaeology, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D.C., will discuss his excavations at Tel Fannakh on Sunday at three o'clock at the Rockefeller Museum in a lecture series (in English) on "Archaeological Sites, Problems and Solutions," sponsored by the Nelson Glueck School of Biblical Archaeology and the Albright Institute of Archaeological Research.

ARRIVALS

Raymond Levin, vice-President and treasurer, and a delegation of 11 members of the Alliance Israélite Universelle, from Paris, for a session of the central committee to be held in Jerusalem.

DEPARTURES

Eva Adelman, chairman of "Emunah," World Religious Zionist Organization, for New York, at the invitation of Hapoel Hamizrachi Women of America, to participate in their annual national convention.

American V wins

TEL AVIV. — The U.S. beat Israel 95-86 here last night in the Intercontinental Cup basketball tournament. Half-time score was 57-51 for the Americans.

It was the Israeli quintet's first loss in five home games. The victors were scored against Brazil, Mexico, Argentina and Canada. The Israeli team leave on Sunday for a series of away games.

'Young Turks' seek to replace Meshel

By DAVID LENNON
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Despite the insistence of Shimon Peres that Yehoram Meshel is the Alignment's agreed candidate for the post of Histadrut secretary-general, younger party members are trying to find an alternative candidate.

Various names have been mentioned — and rejected — during the past few days, including that of Agricultural Minister Aharon Uzan. At a meeting of Labour Party leaders at party headquarters here yesterday afternoon, it was agreed that Meshel was the party's candidate for the June 21 elections. Ra'anan Weitz, head of the Jewish Agency Settlement Department, contacted Defence Minister Peres and asked him to reconsider the choice of Meshel. But Peres rejected this appeal and declared that the decision on Meshel was taken democratically, and that as far as he was concerned "the issue is closed."

This challenge threatens to bring down the "old guard," including incumbent Meshel. The Labour Party "Young Turks" claim that unless the list is changed, the party will suffer the same fate which led to its fall from control after 28 years as rulers of the country.

Observers pointed out that Meshel had already offered 50 per cent of the Alignment seats to staff committees, local labour councils and the settlement sectors, and had also promised that the trade unions would get direct representation on the 22-member supreme central committee. This, however, is considered inadequate by the younger party members, who insist on "new names now." They are particularly eager to get well-known faces to stave off the defeat which they believe is now a distinct possibility.

Andre Kilezinski, the Holocaust survivor who broke into the German Embassy in Tel Aviv last month on Martyrs and Heroes Remembrance Day, left yesterday for Munich. He was headed for Dueseldorf, where the trial of the officers in charge of the Maldanek death camp is in progress. Kilezinski plans to demonstrate against the dragging out of the trial. His entire luggage consisted of a tallit, tefillin, and a large yellow patch with the word "Jew."

The situation is acute because of the June 1 deadline for presenting the party lists. The Labour Party won 39 per cent of the 1,501 Histadrut National Convention seats in the last election. A swing similar to that which occurred in the May 17 general elections would mean that the Alignment representation would drop to around 40 per cent.

In Haifa yesterday, Moshe Wertman, former Knesset member and Alignment whip, was elected the Labour Party's candidate for the post of Hsifa Labour Council secretary in the Histadrut elections. The party's district council, attended by 425 members, gave him a 288 majority over Meir Hameiri, who won 157 votes.

If elected, Wertman will succeed Eliezer Molk, who was denied a third term as council secretary on Wednesday. In Jerusalem, the veteran secretary of the labour council, David Ayalon, has been replaced as Labour's candidate for the post in the coming Histadrut elections by Nissan Harpaz.

Ayalon won just over 50 per cent of the vote in a party contest for the nomination on Wednesday; however, to be renominated, 60 per cent of the vote is needed. In a runoff election last night between Harpaz and Havi Shimon, the former won 68 per cent of the vote.

Elections committee won't handle complaints on Flatto

By JUDY SIEGEL
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The Central Elections Committee officially presented outgoing Knesset Speaker Yisrael Yeshayahu yesterday with a list of the Ninth Knesset's 120 members, while refusing to deal with complaints against one of them — Samuel Flatto Sharon.

Committee chairman Elihu Shalev listened patiently to an appeal by Yosef Lamm of Shelli to "do something" about allegations that Flatto Sharon bought votes or is guilty of certain crimes that require extradition to France.

"We are not the address," asserted Justice Manny. "Either the Knesset can meet and decide that one of its members should not have been elected, or any citizen can go to the police and present evidence against the person in question. We do not handle criminal matters," he said.

Raphael Halperin, the disenchanted Flatto supporter, met yesterday with Justice Manny. Halperin on Wednesday demanded that Flatto resign his Knesset seat or else he would file a complaint with the elections committee based on what he says he knows about election irregularities.

However, after committee officials examined Halperin's information, Halperin was advised to take the matter either to the police or to the Knesset. Justice Manny also declined yesterday to comment on the legal

American Jews know Dayan, will back him — Schindler

By JUDY SIEGEL
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The American Jewish community will welcome the selection of Moshe Dayan as foreign minister, Rabbi Alexander Schindler, chairman of the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations, predicted yesterday.

While not adding or withholding his personal endorsement of Dayan, Schindler told The Jerusalem Post that the naming of the former defence minister to the post was — for Menachem Begin — a "smart move."

Rabbi Schindler is on a short visit here to report to Likud officials and others here on the American Jewish attitude to last week's election results, and to report back to his constituency on the mood here. "American Jews know Dayan better than they know Begin," he maintained. "They have been dealing with Alignment representatives who have visited the U.S. on fundraising missions. Begin, however, has spoken mostly to his party supporters during American visits."

Dayan, he added, would bring the Begin administration closer to the American people. "Dayan is perceived by the

Carter's answers on the Middle East

WASHINGTON. — Following are the questions on the Middle East that came up during President Jimmy Carter's White House news conference yesterday, and Carter's answers:

Question: Last March, you talked about the idea of Israel withdrawing to her 1967 borders with only minor adjustments. Is that still your position? And is there any way that Israel could retain the West Bank of the Jordan and make that fit in the definition of minor adjustments?

Answer: That is a very good question, although I might add again that the United States, including myself as president — we do not have a Middle Eastern settlement plan. But the basic premises have been spelled out very clearly in the United Nations resolutions that have been passed, coming from the Security Council, voted on and supported by our government; and these have been binding policies of the government.

We do insist the right of the Palestinians to have a homeland, to be compensated for losses that they have suffered. They do include the withdrawal of Israel from occupied territories from the 1967 war, and they do include an end of belligerency and a re-establishment of permanent and secure borders. All these things have been spelled out in writing in these United Nations positions, which we have endorsed — every administration since they were passed.

I would certainly assume that withdrawal from West Bank territories — either partially or in their entirety — would be a part of an ultimate settlement. But that's something that has to be worked out still between the Israelis and their neighbours. We do not intend to put forward a description of what the exact borders should be. That's not our role to play.

We will explore possibilities for common agreement and reserve the right to make our opinions known, but we have no control over anyone in the Middle East. We do not want any control over anyone in the Middle East. But these basic principles — permanent peace, secure borders, and the resolution of the Palestinian question — all have been and still are integral parts of any peace settlement.

Q: To follow up on the Middle East, Mr. President, could you give us more of your thinking on the disposition of places like the Golan Heights, which you talked about during the campaign, the question of Jerusalem and other areas like that, and can you say how your proposal for minor alterations differs from the 1969 American plan which called for insubstantial alterations?

A: I can't respond to those specific things. I think it would be inappropriate for me to try to draw a line on a map in the Golan Heights, the West Bank, Jerusalem, or the Sinai Peninsula. That's something that will have to be negotiated between the parties involved. But I think also that it was obvious that the U.S. didn't advance the cause of a settlement when the so-called Rogers Plan was put forward without adequate prior consultations with the different nations who were concerned with the Middle East question. I think it's better to talk in terms of what our country has had as its long-time policy. But as far as an exact definition of the borders, I don't have the capability nor the inclination to go into that.

Q: ... your public statements with respect to a Palestinian homeland are being credited as being a factor in the election of a conservative, hard-line political group in Israel. Do you think that you are going to be able to continue your policy of open discussion of foreign-policy issues and at the same time achieve agreements?

A: Concerning the results of the election in Israel, I think that the international questions in Israel were very slightly discussed or debated during their campaign. My opinion is that the results of the election were not affected appreciably if at all by any statements that I made concerning an ultimate Middle Eastern settlement. Our positions are compatible with the positions taken by my own predecessors. And I think that this is something that must be addressed frankly by the prospective government in Israel, by the people of Israel, their Arab neighbours, and by the people in the U.S.

Q: Mr. President, realizing that a new Israeli government is not in place yet but assuming that Mr. Begin will have a dominant role in it, and based on his initial remarks about withdrawal, etc., do you see in this a potential obstacle to the peace process?

A: No, I don't. I don't yet have any way to know who will put the government together. Obviously, Mr. Begin leads the Likud government (sic) which came in first and we are waiting for the Israeli election result to be confirmed and for the President of Israel to designate the leader of that party to put that government together. Following that time and before the government is completely evolved, I intend to congratulate Mr. Begin, if it is he, and to invite him or whoever is designated to come over here for discussions with me. There are obviously difficulties caused by change in the Israeli government. But in the long run, as is the case in our own country and any democracy like Israel, the government leaders fairly accurately reflect the hopes and desires and fears and purposes of the people whom they are chosen to lead. Mr. Begin will have to put together a government. It will have to deal with conflicting interests as he forms his cabinet, and brings in other groups to make sure that he has a majority in the Knesset.

Q: So, I don't look at this as an insuperable obstacle. It does create a question. I think a large part of that question can be resolved when I meet with him personally. And when he meets with the congressional leaders and with the Jewish Americans, who are very deeply interested in this and (he) sees the purpose of our own country. I think this might have an effect on him, and I have already seen some moderation in his views as he has dealt with Mr. Yadin and others. And I hope that this moderation will continue. Obviously the Arab leaders also have to be moderate. Some of the adamant stands that they have taken in the historical past have to be abandoned. If they didn't there would be no hope for peace. So all sides of this discussion have to yield to some degree to accomplish the purposes of their own people.

LIKUD TO REVIEW

cancelled the second negotiating session with the Likud, scheduled for yesterday evening. Instead, the DMC secretariat debated the new situation.

In initial consultations, MK-elect Mordechai Yirshubski urged calling off the negotiations. Shmuel Tamir said the DMC wanted a "based on mutual trust" and Meir Zorea sounded a similar note when he said the way the offer was made to Dayan "appears to hurt the attempt to introduce changes."

"What are we, a group of Beter kids?" one DMC leader asked, referring to Herut's youth group. Another leader, who asked not to be identified, believed the Likud move was designed to force the DMC to accept a more hawkish policy on future borders. But he added: "The question is whether we're going to be coalition partners or a fig leaf. We'll join the cabinet if we can influence decisions."

The decision, adopted unanimously in the DMC secretariat, said negotiations with the Likud could be resumed only if decisions regarding the government's formation are rescinded, "and if the Likud executive informs us, formally and publicly, that all issues pertaining to the proposed government policy, its methods of operation, composition of ministries and the personalities there — except for the prime minister — are completely open and

Flatto did buy votes, says Aloni

TEL AVIV (Itim). — MK Shulamit Aloni yesterday submitted to the district court here her defence brief in the IL500,000 libel suit filed by MK-elect Samuel Flatto Sharon against her, Boaz Moav, and the Citizens Rights Movement. Flatto charged that they falsely accused him in their election advertising of having bought votes.

In the brief, Aloni accepts full responsibility for the publication of the ads in question. She also argues that the court is incompetent to try her because of her parliamentary immunity. Aloni further states that Flatto

Court: Housing Ministry savers must get 40 per cent mortgages

The Supreme Court ruled yesterday that the Housing Ministry must grant 40 per cent loans to persons buying flats under its savings scheme — a decision that may cost the Treasury millions of pounds. It was overturning a lower court decision that had rejected a suit brought by a Tel Aviv attorney.

The attorney, Asher Maoz, had signed a contract with the ministry which he said explicitly stated he would be given a loan of "not more than 40 per cent" of the value of his flat. But when he received the flat, he said, he was told he would be given a smaller sum. His attempt to reverse this in the Tel Aviv District Court had failed.

Oil-state funds won't be blocked

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Despite serious questions about the political purposes behind Arab oil-producing states' recent donations of millions of dollars to municipalities in the administered territories, the military government is expected to allow the funds to be accepted by the recipients. The doubts about the origin and intent of the funding are shared by authorities in Amman. It has been learned. The funds, it had been reported, were allocated to the municipalities — including Gaza, El-

Four soldiers killed in war identified

By HIRSH GOODMAN
Post Military Correspondent

Four more of the soldiers whose bodies were returned to Israel on the eve of Independence Day from Egypt have been identified. Their names were given last night as Rav-Tsurai David Tal of Jerusalem, Samal Salomon Dahan of Jerusalem, Samal Riaboo Abraham Cohen of Jerusalem and Segen Yehzekiel Leibovitz of Kfar Sava.

Thus far, five of the 9 soldiers whose bodies were returned — all of whom fell in the Yom Kippur War — have been identified. The identification process is being conducted by specialists from the army chaplaincy together with doctors from the Abu Kabir Institute for Forensic Medicine.

Salomon Dahan will be buried at the Mount Herzl military cemetery at 6 p.m. on Sunday. Abraham Cohen will be buried on Mount Herzl at 11 a.m. Sunday. Yehzekiel Leibovitz will be buried at the Kfar Sava military cemetery at 4.30 p.m. Sunday, and David Tal will be buried on Mount Herzl at 5 p.m. Monday.

The four fell in a stronghold held by the Jerusalem Brigade in the central sector of the Suez Canal.

Ma'alot survivors see Dutch envoy

A delegation of survivors of the Ma'alot massacre yesterday met with a Dutch envoy to deliver a message of sympathy for, and identification with, the 105 children and six teachers currently being held hostage by South Moluccan terrorists in Bovenmerende, Holland.

The four high school students, from the religious high school in Safad, met with Dutch Ambassador Christiana Arlens at the embassy and at his residence. They delivered to him a letter in which they expressed their "emotional identification" with the hostage schoolchildren.

On May 5, 1974, 22 Safad high school students were killed and scores of others injured when terrorists took over the school building in Ma'alot where they were spending the night on a school outing.

AIR FORCE TAKEOVER

trollers in the country (35 of these are at Ben-Gurion Airport). He expected El Al to operate its full schedule today and hoped that foreign companies would follow suit, although the choice of whether they would continue to fly to Israel rests with them.

He said the suspensions would remain in force, and the Air Force continued to operate all control towers, until the flight controllers pledge themselves to a full work schedule. The Attorney-General is currently studying whether there is any base for legal proceedings against the flight controllers, who had been on a slow-down.

The air controllers have for the past three weeks been staging a "fly-by-rule" tactic which had caused serious delays — of up to eight hours. It was understood that foreign airlines had been considering discontinuing their service to Israel. El Al handles about half the traffic to and from Israel.

The actual take-over at Ben-Gurion Airport went off smoothly. The flight controllers on duty were summoned to an urgent meeting with airport director Ezra Salas. While they were in his office the Air Force flight controllers took over the tower and began work. It is understood that similar take-overs also went off without a hitch at the other fields.

Shlomo Azulai, chairman of the 1,800-member Civil Aviation Workers Union had earlier announced that they would go on strike at 8 a.m. and would stay out "until the irresponsible sanctions imposed by the control tower staff cease."

Azulai later told The Jerusalem Post that the workers believed it better to shut down the airfield altogether rather than endure the present anarchy, which was causing needless suffering to passengers, losing the country enormous sums of money and goodwill.

THE WINNING Mital Hapayit tickets this week were: 433084 (IL750,000), 407587 (IL100,000), 77915 (IL50,000) and 382170 (IL25,000). All tickets ending with the figure 4 won IL20 each.

Tourism Ministry employee kills two bosses, then self

Workers at the Ministry of Tourism in downtown Jerusalem yesterday morning thought that they were being attacked by terrorists, as a disgruntled employee ran amok in the ministry's corridors and offices, killing two persons before taking his own life.

Dead are the assailant, Moshe Zarzar, 36, an employee in the dispatch department; Shabtai Wolfenbutter, 30, personnel manager; and archives manager Yitzhak Dehan, 38. Two other men were wounded by bullets from Zarzar's pistol, and two others were hurt when they jumped out of second-story windows fleeing from the attack. Several other employees were slightly injured by flying splinters of glass and wood.

Zarzar, married and the father of two, was a disabled veteran of the Six Day War. He had undergone treatment in the psychiatric ward of Jerusalem's Hadassah Hospital. Arriving for work as usual in the dispatch department about 8.45 a.m., Zarzar suddenly pulled out a pistol, according to police and witnesses. He walked into Wolfenbutter's ground-floor office and shot him. Wolfenbutter died later in hospital.

Zarzar then crossed the corridor to shoot Wolfenbutter's deputy, Benjamin Frizan, 26. He continued to the archives, where he had formerly been employed, and killed Dehan. Shmuel Zuril, 28, director of the Jerusalem Tourist Information Office, was wounded by one of the shots when he entered the corridor, which is connected with his office. Zarzar then walked into the office of the deputy director-general for administration, Meir Vidor. Vidor had left the room only moments before to investigate the commotion. Alone, Zarzar killed himself with a shot in the head.

Police received a garbled call for help from the ministry at 8.45. Within minutes, scores of policemen, border policemen and ambulances were on the scene for what they thought was a terrorist attack.

But the terror, which had lasted only a few minutes, was over. All that remained of the rampage were broken pieces of furniture and blood-splattered walls and floors. All the wounded were taken to Shaare Zedek Hospital, except for Zuril, who was taken to Hadassah.

Two people, Shalom Abuaid, 28, and Yitzhak Subari, 47, were hurt when they jumped out of windows. Spectators seemed relieved when they discovered that the tragedy was not the work of terrorists. "It was one of ours," said one woman.

After the ambulances had left, the bystanders and police stood about aimlessly for a few minutes. Then Jerusalem police chief Sgan-Nitzav David Kraus called out, "Back to work boys." With that, the crowd dispersed.

It took longer for work to return to normal at the Tourism Ministry, where stunned clerks wandered about discussing the tragedy.

Meanwhile the Jerusalem police spokesman confirmed that Zarzar had possessed a pistol for which he had a valid and legal permit. While noting that such permits were formally issued by the Interior Ministry, he did point out that not everyone who undergoes psychiatric treatment is automatically barred from owning a firearm.

Tourism Minister spokesman Michael Gidron said Zarzar had been employed with the cooperation of the rehabilitation department of the Defence Ministry.

Shaare Zedek and Hadassah Hospitals reported that all of the wounded were in good condition last night.

Disruptions on air waves

Sporadic disruptions continue to plague radio and television as broadcast engineers press their demand for a "stand-by increment" to their pay cheques.

So far the sanctions are affecting radio broadcasts on all stations in the Tel Aviv area, with no programming except the hourly news bulletins being aired between 11 p.m. and 8 a.m.

In addition, UHF television channel 27 in Tel Aviv and channels 40 and 56 in Jerusalem were still blacked out as of last night. Though channels 40 and 56 serve Jerusalem viewers, their transmission facilities are remotely controlled from Tel Aviv.

It is the Tel Aviv works committee of the Communications Ministry's broadcasting department which is demanding the extra stand-by pay. The workers say that, like doctors, they are entitled to a monthly bonus for being available for "emergency" duty at transmitter sites, if and when needed.

The ministry's press officer, Zecharya Mikrotzky, told The Jerusalem Post last night: "We have 16,800 employees in the Communications Ministry and none of them — including those workers — has been asked to stay at home and make himself available for call. Most of our broadcasting equipment is semi-automated. So if a worker fails to report for work, the show can still go on, even with a reduced staff on hand."

Mikrotzky said that when a piece of equipment breaks down and additional staff is needed, the roster is canvassed until someone is called in. "And we pay the full rate for this extra-time work, just as provided for in the work agreement with the broadcast engineers," he said.

According to Mikrotzky, fewer than 30 engineers and technicians are involved in the partial work stoppage. He said their works committee was invited to meet with the ministry's director-general Moshe Gidron on Wednesday, but informed him that they were not interested.

Tourist pickets travel agency after failing to get promised hotel room

Clerks inside cowered behind their desks yesterday as Harriet Karol, a tourist from Los Angeles, demonstrated outside the Jerusalem office of Koppel Tours.

Mrs. Karol, who was accompanied by several muscular young men carrying signs, told The Jerusalem Post that she was protesting the agency's unfair treatment. She was especially concerned, she said, that Koppel would continue to be less than equitable in its dealings with tourists.

A successful real estate investor, Mrs. Karol, who arrived eight days ago, was due to stay at the Jerusalem Hilton. When her group arrived at the hotel, however, she and another tourist were told that the Hilton had overbooked and they must go to the Diplomat, across town.

She was not going to budge, even if she had to sleep in their lobby, she said. "But the hotel clerks convinced me it was not them but Koppel that was at fault." The company had only reserved rooms for 20; the group had 22 members.

After calling her family in Los Angeles to tell them of her change of address, she spent the night at the Diplomat. The next day, she went to the Koppel office where the manager evaded her.

Finally she did get a room in the Hilton, but by that time she was up in arms. She felt it was her duty to pursue the issue, she said.

She complained at the Tourism Ministry offices, where Minister Moshe Kol personally listened to her complaint.

Learning that she needed a police permit to demonstrate, she got one on Wednesday. Yesterday she was in front of the Koppel office with her signs and supporters. Office manager Nat Himmelhook hovered in the background not far from a poster which read, "Fire Nat Himmelhook."

He told me he was sick in bed when I tried to talk to him on the phone today," she said. "He seems to have gotten well pretty fast."

A Koppel spokesman told The Post that the agency had notified the agent in Los Angeles that it could only put up 20 people at the Hilton. "Finally, with the cooperation of the Hilton, we found a room for her there. That was all we could do."

Jerusalem bystanders seemed to sympathize with Mrs. Karol. One woman told her she must come on aliyah "to help us get rid of all the crooks in the Jewish Agency."

A social worker who had worked with some of the youths protesting said, "These Americans really have good consumer consciousness."

A policeman who checked Mrs. Karol's permit to demonstrate after the agency called the police only said, "Kol hakavod" (more power to her).

'New breed' of mosquitoes keeps Haifaites scratching breeding grounds for the mosquitoes, he explained.

He appealed to the public to report any water, even if only a puddle of rain, to his department, so that we can wipe out the mosquitoes at source, which is the only effective way to fight them."

He said he had "not heard" of any new type of mosquito, but noted that every mosquito bite is bothersome, especially at night. He said he had alerted the Health Ministry's local sanitation engineer in the possibility of a new strain of biting insect and the engineer, Y. Avital, said he would investigate the matter.

Entomologist Meir Bross said that if a new strain of mosquito — possibly immune to the regular sprays — is involved it should be studied to provide an antidote. He therefore called on residents to watch specimens that caused skin irritation and to bring them to him for examination. "Dead or alive." They should be brought in a closed jar, in a few drops of alcohol, to his home at 20 Alexander Yanai Street. He can also be reached by telephoning 264868.

Local residents, especially of the Naveh Sba'an and Roma quarters, have been plagued by an invasion of mosquitoes that is keeping many awake swatting and itching.

Some claim that the mosquitoes are of a new breed "more aggressive and with tougher stings, sort of bawkyish," adding that the sting causes immediate swelling and lasting irritation.

The director of the city's cleaning department, David Yehoshua, confirmed the plague and said his men have doubled their efforts to spray the offending zoomers out of existence.

He said the invasion was due to this year's late rains, which washed away the routine spraying of known mosquito-breeding grounds which his men did in April. The late rains created new bodies of stagnant water, especially on the eastern slopes of Mount Carmel, creating

Severe shortage of institutions for Israel's mentally retarded

There is a severe shortage of institutions for the mentally retarded in Israel, and the Welfare Ministry has built only two new ones in the last 10 years, the state comptroller reported in his 1976 survey.

At the end of 1976, the estimated number of retarded persons was 15,000. About 12,000 were in public or private institutions or community care centres, and 1,200 were on the waiting list for boarding institutions. An estimated 300 persons were added to the waiting list each year for the past four years, but no one knows the exact number, since the ministry has not updated its figures.

The Service for the Retarded estimates that the annual rate will increase, however, and some 800 additional persons each year will be waiting for acceptance in an institution.

The ministry, which is also responsible for supervising private institutions, closed eight of them in 1974/75 for failing to meet standards of operation. The 630 residents were then distributed among other institutions. By the end of 1976, institutions were overcrowded by a national average of 25 per cent.

The two new institutions built in the last 10 years can accommodate 864 residents, and other institutions have been expanded to accept another 850. But the pace of building and expansion was much slower than originally planned, the comptroller pointed out.

In 1968, the service decided to build an institution for 432 residents in Dimona, to be finished by 1971 at a cost of IL2m. The tender, scheduled for January 1969, was published in February 1973. By then the estimated cost was IL20.7m. In the end it cost IL21m, of which IL22m was attributed to inflation.

By the time the comptroller's study was finished, work on the building had not been completed. In November 1976, 10 years after the decision to build the institution, it was serving only one-third of its projected population — 150 retarded persons.

Some of the development of institutions for the retarded has been done through the Association for the Construction and Operation of Institutions, set up in cooperation with Akim in 1963. Its original purpose was to build an institution at Kfar Nahman, but its operations were later expanded.

The association was first to be funded by trusts. But in fact, its later work (after Kfar Nahman) was financed almost entirely by the Ministry of Welfare. In that case, the ministry is required to employ only the government's own Public Works Department in construction. It didn't.

Instead, it commissioned work from various private contractors, and the comptroller found irregularities in the publishing and acceptance of tenders. The lowest bid did not always get the job; there was lack of documentation of bids and expenditures.

Budget estimates were found to be unrealistic. When the Hevrat Kfar Nahman institution for delinquent youth was taken over for conversion into an institution for the retarded (in 1974), the ministry estimated the cost of expansion at IL1,150,000. The actual cost that year was over IL5m.

This is the last of a series of summaries of the recently published State Comptroller Report.

Woman remanded in girl's abduction

TEL AVIV (Itim). — A 22-year-old Ramle woman was remanded in custody for 15 days yesterday, in connection with her alleged role in the kidnapping of a high school girl here.

According to the police complaint, Natalia Jacobashvili went to the girl's school and told officials there she was a nurse who had come to get the victim because one of her family had been injured in an accident. The victim was then allegedly taken to Beit Shemesh, where she was held by the Jacobashvili woman and several accomplices.

Three other persons — two youths from Tel Aviv and a Holon woman — have been arrested in connection with the kidnapping. The Holon woman was freed on bail, but yesterday Magistrate Court Judge Arye Even-Ari denied a request to free Jacobashvili. He also banned publication of the name of the victim, the school she attends, or other details of the case.

Police indicated that the incident followed attempts by the victim's parents to break her relationship with one of the accused youths.

Ex-bank manager jailed

TEL AVIV (Itim). — A former bank manager was yesterday sentenced to four months in jail for having concealed foreign currency belonging to a person suspected of income tax violations.

In 1975 one Hanan Folke was under investigation by the income tax authorities. Herman Ostrik, 59, manager of the Bank Hapoalim branch in Rehov Ha'atzma'ut, Bat Yam, was convicted of obstruction of justice.

The court accepted the prosecution charge that Ostrik had given Folke a safe-deposit box without recording the fact. Later, he told the income tax men that Folke had no safe-deposit box, and after they left he removed from it envelopes containing foreign currency.

Ostrik's lawyer, Shlomo Cohen-Zidon, asked the court to take into account the fact that his client had been fired without severance pay after 25 years of exemplary service. Judge Haim Elliat said that it was only for that reason that he was handing down such a light sentence.

Israel, Mexico sign cultural agreement

A new cultural exchange agreement between Israel and Mexico that will involve a widening of Hebrew teaching in the Latin American country was signed yesterday in Jerusalem.

Taking part were Carlos Gonzales Parodi, head of the Mexican Foreign Ministry's culture and science department, and Abba Gefen, director of the Israeli Foreign Ministry's division for cultural and scientific relations. The agreement also calls for exchanges of journalists, lecturers, sportsmen and radio and TV programmes.

Carter at press conference:

Commander in Korea made 'serious breach'

WASHINGTON (AP). — Major General John K. Singlaub's criticism of U.S. plans to withdraw troops from South Korea was "a very serious breach" of his responsibility and was "an invitation to the world to expect an inevitable war," U.S. President Jimmy Carter said yesterday.

He added in his news conference that "Gen. Singlaub was not fired" for his remarks on the withdrawal to a reporter. "He was not being chastised or punished," Carter went on, explaining that the officer had been "transferred."

Later in the news conference, the president levelled very serious complaints against Singlaub, the third-ranking American officer in Korea. Singlaub had been briefed on the policy to pull out the 33,000 U.S. ground troops now in Korea over the next four or five years, Carter said. He added that the policy had been evolved over a number of years.

By saying the pullback would lead to a new war with North Korea, Singlaub had engaged "in a very serious breach of the propriety that must exist" in the expressions of an American military official, Carter said.

There was no way Singlaub could be allowed to remain in Korea, the president added, referring to the general's statement to Congress that he would have carried out the withdrawal policy even though disagreeing with it.

His anti-withdrawal stand, Carter said, "was an invitation to North Korea that South Korea is not able to take care of itself... it was an invitation to the world to expect an inevitable war."

Schmidt faces no-confidence motion

BONN (UPI). — The Christian Democrats said yesterday that they would introduce a motion of no-confidence in Chancellor Helmut Schmidt on the basis of a constitutional court ruling against him.

Opposition leader Helmut Kohl, who was narrowly defeated by Schmidt in last October's election, said the motion would be introduced by the Christian Democrats' Bavarian leader, told reporters that Schmidt should step down after Wednesday's court ruling.

Nixon tells David Frost: Watergate authors are 'trash'

WASHINGTON (AP). — Former President Richard M. Nixon called the two reporters who broke much of the Watergate scandal "trash," even as he confirmed one of the more controversial episodes in their book. "I knew the kind of trash they were," Nixon told British entertainer David Frost in his fourth television interview aired on Wednesday.

Without referring by name to Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein, whose Watergate reporting won a Pulitzer Prize for "The Washington Post," Nixon said he held them in "utter contempt."

Dutch Labour Party gains 10 seats

THE HAGUE (Reuter). — Dutch Prime Minister Joop den Uyl, boosted by a triumph for his Labour Party in the Dutch general election, yesterday postponed the first steps towards forming a new coalition while he deals with Holland's double hostage drama.

Labour gained a record 10 seats on Wednesday, gobbling up the voter strength of small left-wing parties. Den Uyl, 57, described the election which left Labour with 53 seats, as the biggest shift in the Dutch political scene for 30 years. The Christian Democrats, led by Justice Minister Andreas van Agt, finished with 49 seats, a gain of two. The Liberal Party moved up from 22 seats to 28. The small parties were decimated.

Nixon spoke bitterly about the reporters, authors of the book "The Final Days." With tight-lipped anger, he called their book "contemptible journalism," while admitting he had read only stories about the work rather than the book itself.

"All I say is Mrs. Nixon read it and her stroke came three days later," Nixon said. "I didn't want her to read it because I knew the kind of trash it was and the kind of trash they are..."

"This doesn't indicate that that caused the stroke, because the doctors don't know what caused the stroke," the former president added, "but it sure didn't help."

In the book, the two authors said Mrs. Nixon went to the servants' quarters in search of liquor during the last days in the White House.

"For them to... take me on is one thing," Nixon said. "For them to take her on, in my view, that's below the belt."

But the former president confirmed one account in the book — that the night before Nixon announced his resignation, he and Secretary of State Henry Kissinger cried and wept in silent prayer.

"Now, Henry, I know you and I are both alike in one way," Nixon recalled saying. "We don't wear our religion on our sleeve. I'm a Quaker and you're a Jew and the status is very orthodox, but I think both of us probably have a deeper religious sensitivity than some of those that are so loudly proclaiming it all the time."

In general, Nixon had few kind words for the press. He said that Spiro Agnew, who resigned as vice-president after being named in a kickback scandal, "got a lot rougher treatment than I would have been the case had he been one of the liberals' favourite pin-up boys."

He characterized the Supreme Court decision in Sullivan vs. "The New York Times" as "a licence for the media to lie."

"So my point is: Let's just not have all this sanctimonious business about the poor repressed press. I went through it through all the years I've been in public life, and... they never have been repressed as far as I'm concerned."

or don't want 'em repressed; but believe me, when they take me on, or when they take any public figure on, Democrat or Republican, liberal or conservative, I think the public figure ought to come back and crack 'em in the puss."

South Africa and Zambia exchange border fire

PRETORIA (UPI). — South African security forces and Zambian soldiers exchanged fire across their common border along the Caprivi strip on Wednesday, a defence force spokesman said yesterday.

He said the Zambian forces opened fire with small arms on a South African observation post "without provocation."

"The Zambian fire was returned and silenced," he said. A spokesman for the office of Zambian President Kenneth Kaunda said in Lusaka there were no casualties among the Zambian troops, but he accused the South Africans of provoking the shooting. The Zambians, he said, "quickly responded and silenced the enemy with a barrage of gunfire."

"The Zambian security forces are in no mood to stand the arrogance and provocation from racist troops," Kaunda's spokesman said.

The Caprivi strip is a narrow finger of land jutting out eastwards from the northern part of South West Africa. It is bordered by its northern edge the strip borders Angola and Zambia, on Botswana in the south and touches Rhodesia at its very tip.

South African troops have been in the region for at least 10 years.

In another incident on Wednesday Zambian troops fired at an unarmed civilian aircraft flying on the Caprivi side of the border.

Brief border clashes between South African troops and Zambian forces, and further west, occasionally between South Africans and Angolan units, have flared up at times in the past year.

The defence force spokesman said, "This sort of incident takes place on occasion, usually towards the end of the month when Zambian troops receive their pay or when troops are rotated."

The exchange of gunfire preceded a meeting in Lusaka yesterday of military and defence officials from the five black frontline states — Zambia, Tanzania, Botswana, Angola and Mozambique.

Angolan Home Affairs Minister Luis Rodrigues told reporters the main purpose of the meeting was "to map out a positive strategy and organization system" to coordinate the five states' movements in case of attack.

"Pravda" said that the new constitution — which was first suggested by Nikita Khrushchev in 1958 and has been in the works ever since — would contain for the first time special chapters on foreign policy and defence of the homeland.

"Pravda" said the foreign-policy section "says that the Soviet state consistently pursues the Leninist policy of peace, comes out for strengthening the security of people and an extensive international cooperation."

On its front page, "Pravda" quoted an engineer from Minsk as writing: "When you meet someone on the street the talk is always of the recent plenum of the central committee. My colleagues unanimously approve the important decisions taken by the plenum and we are waiting impatiently for publication of the draft of the constitution."

An editor at "Pravda" would give no indication when the text of the new Soviet constitution would be published.

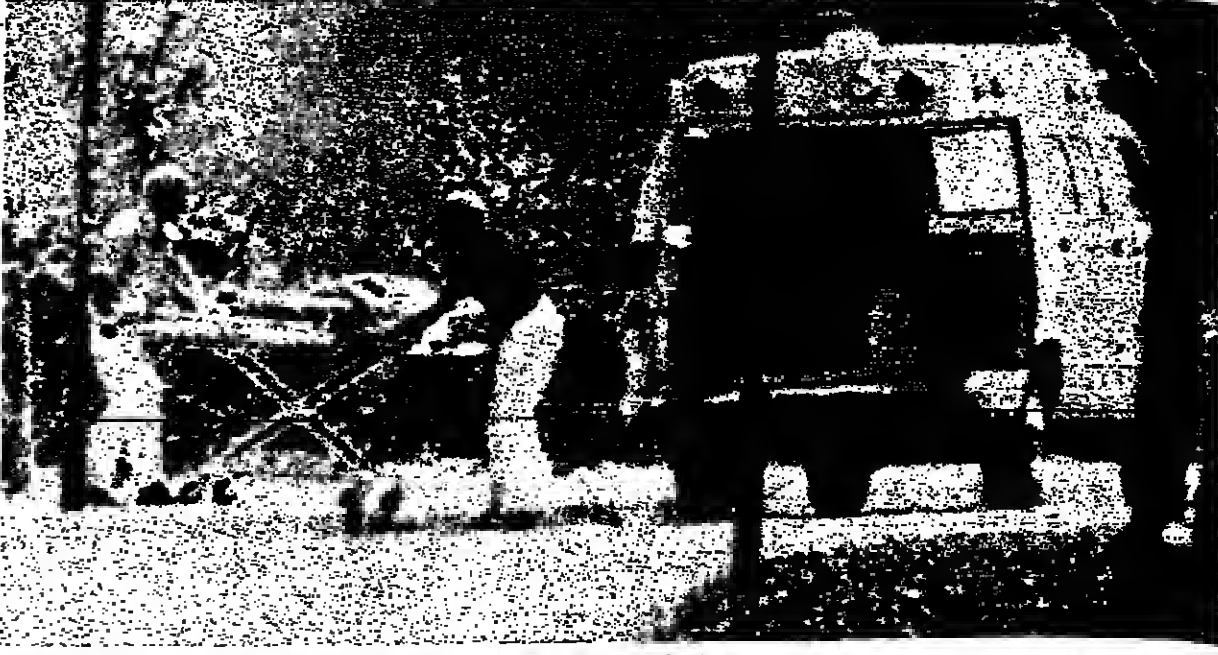

He said it required approval of the presidium of the Supreme Soviet, headed by Soviet President Nikolai Podgorniy — who was stripped of his Politburo seat in the same central committee session which approved the draft of the Brezhnev constitution.

Published reaction made no mention at all of Podgorniy.

Iran drops bid for Olympics

TEHRAN (Reuter). — Iran has decided not to bid for the 1984 Olympic Games because of the political, manpower, financial and security problems involved, according to sports officials quoted here yesterday.

The English-language newspaper "Kayhan International" reported that Iranian Olympic Committee secretary-general Ali Asghar Fayrabi had advised International Olympic Committee (IOC) presi-

Moluccan gunmen free one girl as drama enters fifth day

BOVENSMILDE, Holland (Reuter). — South Moluccan gunmen freed a sick child yesterday but still held 105 children hostage at a primary school here.

Dutch officials pleaded with the gunmen by telephone to end what they called the "inhuman captivity of innocent children." The gunmen soon after allowed two ambulance men to enter the school.

They carried Madeleine Witjes, 7, out on a stretcher. The girl, a small form huddled in brown blankets, was put into the ambulance and whisked away to hospital for treatment of what an official said was an internal disorder.

Madeline's release was the first break in the twin hostage drama in north Holland. But it seemed to be an isolated incident without wider significance.

Speaking to reporters in The Hague after the girl was set free, Prime Minister Joop den Uyl said "There is no prospect yet of a concrete solution."

Justice Minister Andreas Van Agt made clear that telephone negotiations with the two groups of guerrillas, in the school and on a train where 55 hostages are being held 20 kilometres from here, were tough, and could be protracted.

"We are dealing with people who are not easily rattled," he told reporters. "But we are not letting ourselves be intimidated. We are being cold-blooded too." His comment on intimidation was an apparent reference to the refusal of both guerrilla groups to accept any food yesterday — no food has gone to the train for 48 hours now — and putting hostages on display outside the train, hands tied and noses around their necks.

Three hostages were displayed on Wednesday and a fourth got the same treatment yesterday morning for 15 minutes.

Madeline was set free after her headmaster, Kef Van Vliet, phoned the crisis centre at Assen, headquarters for officials dealing with the sieges, and said that the girl was ill.

He was asked to report her pulse and temperature. Doctors at Assen then told him that she must go to hospital and the guerrillas agreed to release her.

The first-grade pupil was the first hostage to go free since the initial sorting out of children and train passengers when the gunmen struck on Monday morning. In the first hour of the sieges, 20 people were allowed to leave both school and train.

Turks and Greeks stop talking about Cyprus

NICOSIA (Reuter). — Intercommunal talks on the future of Cyprus ended after a two-hour session yesterday without a date being fixed for their resumption.

UN special representative P. de Cuellar said economic problems had been discussed, but informed sources said Turkish-Cypriot philosopher Umut Onan had raised the question of alleged economic warfare by Greek Cypriots.

The sources said the Turkish Cypriot side had not mentioned the Danish sea captain kidnapped by the Greek Cypriots when his ship called at the closed port of Famagusta. They had previously demanded his immediate release — a call which the Greek Cypriot side regarded as an ultimatum.

The Greek Cypriots are said to be convinced that the Turks are using delaying tactics to avoid presenting meaningful proposals.

At the same time, the Turkish Cypriot radio has stepped up demands for the Greek side to stop what it calls "slandering propaganda" against its side.

Observers say that only one other meeting is likely to be held before Perez de Cuellar returns to New York to report to UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim. This meeting will chair another round of talks at a later date.

Digging up an emperor

Emperor Hadrian has been had for the Jewish people since he built Jerusalem's Temple Mount wall. He managed to get Morton Leventhal on coast-to-coast television in the U.S. and may have raised money for the UJA into the bargain.

Leventhal, a New York stockbroker, is the man who dug up a bronze statue of Hadrian last year in a field belonging to Kibbutz Tzvi Zvi in the Beisan Valley after locating it with a metal detector. Israeli newspapers at the time concentrated on the find and referred only in passing to the tourist, generally unnamed, who found it. In the U.S., however, Leventhal shared equal billing with Hadrian. He was quoted in a front-page story in the New York Times, appeared on three coast-to-coast television programmes (including that of Barbara Walters and the Tell the Truth quiz), was interviewed for the Voice of America by Ben Graner and gave some 15 lectures in four months.

Leventhal, or "Mutt", as he is known in New York's Lower East Side where he grew up and still lives, was recently back to Israel to visit his sister who lives at Tzvi Zvi. His plans to sweep the kibbutz fields again were upset by a bout of flu which kept him in bed for three weeks. During a visit to Jerusalem he recounted the story of his meeting with Hadrian and the subsequent laurels bestowed upon him by the American media.

IT WAS a torrid Friday in July, 1975 when Leventhal, who had long pursued treasure hunting as a hobby, ventured out on a bicycle from Tzvi Zvi with his metal detector. He had brought the $200 detector into the country on one of his periodic visits several years before and kept it stored at the kibbutz. The site he chose this day was a field along the pre-1967 Jordanian-Israeli border. "I took a bearing on a point to the distance and was walking in a straight line. Then I saw a little clearing about 10 feet to the left and veered. Suddenly I got a reading."

Leventhal began probing with a boy-scout knife and after 20 minutes struck something metallic. He pulled up a circular piece of metal, partially corroded, which seemed like a piece of sewer pipe. Leventhal, whose detector regularly leads him to garbage dumps, was not surprised. Passing the detector over the site he got another reading and kept digging. His knife struck what seemed like an old cannonball. As Leventhal cleared the dirt away from it, his fingers detected what seemed to be a hairline shaped into the metal object.

He hauled the dark object out of the ground and rolled it over. Looking back up at him was a face. "It seemed to be saying 'thanks for letting me out of the ground,'" he says. Leventhal rolled the head and the pipe — which turned out to be the statue's neck — in a t-shirt, strapped it down in a small duffel bag to the back of his bike and pedaled the two kilometres back to his sister's house in the religious kibbutz. "I drank two quarts of water and went to lunch."

No one was around when he returned. The kibbutz members were either napping or preparing for the Sabbath. Leventhal had left the head in his sister's garden. He sat beneath a tree, drank some more water and looked at it. "I sat and looked at the head until about 4 o'clock. There was nobody to talk to."

He finally got up and walked over to the apartment of a neighbour.

Morton Leventhal with the bronze bust of Roman Emperor Hadrian, which he found on July 25, 1975 at Tzvi Zvi.

Ruthie, whom he knew to be an amateur archaeologist. "I asked her to come and look at something I'd found. She took one look and jumped." Leventhal had made up his mind to present the head — whoever it was — to the kibbutz as a gift. He carried it over to the communal dining hall and set it up for viewing.

"After the Sabbath service, you couldn't get into the dining room. There was such a crowd. People were running out to call others. One man said to me 'I and my whole family want to thank you for presenting us this to look at.' Some kibbutz members even then were speculating that the head was that of Hadrian. By next morning, after consultation with archaeology books about 80 percent of the members had concluded that it was Hadrian. The emperor had passed through the Beisan Valley in 130 C.E. on his way to Jerusalem upon whose ruins a few years later he would build the city of Aelia Capitolina. The identity was soon confirmed by archaeologists."

(Gideon Forster of the Antiquities Department suggests that the statue, whose sections had undoubtedly been cast in Rome, was set up by the Sixth Roman Legion whose camp was located nearby in honour of Hadrian's visit to Palestine.)

On Sunday Leventhal returned to the site. The beep of his detector soon homed him in on the bronze replica of Hadrian's breast armour. In all about half the larger-than-life-size statue was uncovered.

Except for some fragments of statues found elsewhere in the former Roman Empire, Leventhal's Hadrian is perhaps the only monumental bronze statue showing a Roman emperor dressed in armour, although there are many stone statues of Hadrian. There is only one other life-size bronze statue of him existing. It is in the Archaeological Museum in Istanbul. Leventhal's Hadrian is presently undergoing a slow cleaning process by experts at the Israel Museum where it is to be placed on public exhibition with suitable fanfare within a few months.

GOVERNMENT archaeologists have difficulty deciding whether to smile gleefully or frown when asked about the find. "We're not very happy about Leventhal's digging it up," says Forster. "Although we didn't bring charges, it's against the law to search for or excavate antiquities and we want the public to know this." On the other hand, Forster admits that had it not been for Leventhal the statue might never have been found. Nevertheless, as a result of the incident the department issued a regulation specifically forbidding the use of metal detectors by non-authorized persons to search for antiquities.

The news of Leventhal's discovery had been reported briefly at the time in the local press. The day before he was to return to the U.S. he received a call at Tzvi Zvi from the New York Times correspondent to Jerusalem, Terrence Smith, to ask for details. Leventhal landed in New York on a Thursday, quit his job with a Wall Street brokerage firm on Friday as he had planned before his trip and began a new job with another Wall Street firm the following Monday. On Tuesday, the story appeared in the Times, beginning on the top half of the front page with a picture of Hadrian's head and continuing extensively on an inside page, illustrated by a picture of Leventhal. (At Smith's request, Leventhal had contacted the Times upon his arrival to give them the photograph of his head and be photographed himself.)

Leventhal's employers soon began receiving calls from clients asking whether they had seen the front page story in the Times about their newest employee. (The story mentioned the firm's name.) The paper was quickly sent for and the employers were soon relieved to discover that the subject of the story was not a stock scandal investigation. Before the day was done, notices were being prepared to inform clients that Mr. Morton Leventhal, who had appeared so prominently in the New York Times, was now associated with their firm. Before the day was done, too, Leventhal was addressing a meeting of a B'nai B'rith Lodge held in his office building at the request of his boss. "I'd never spoken to more than three people before."

He was soon speaking to millions as invitations came in from national television networks and radio shows. Time and Newsweek had photographs of him and so did numerous other publications. A controversial personality with a way with words, Leventhal began making the rounds of Hadassah sisterhoods, Temple brotherhoods, mummamatic societies, treasure hunting clubs and other groups, with slides and an easy patter.

The natural climax of the story is that Leventhal went on to cap fame with fortune — the stockbroker who casually priced up a statue whose estimated value is $3 million going on to take Wall Street by the throat. It didn't get one customer out of all this, says Leventhal with a smile. "The first I lost clients. They would tell me afterwards 'I didn't want to call because I didn't want to bother you.'"

Mutt may yet make his fortune but even if he doesn't, he knows that no Wall Street tycoon, though he dine with the mighty, has ever before wrapped the head of a Roman emperor in his t-shirt before peddling off to lunch.

OPTIMISTIC opponents of Likud hoped, and pessimistic supporters feared, that the responsibilities of office might result in the adoption of more temperate policies by the party's leaders. Successful statesmen very often change their views as soon as the voters have cast their ballots beyond retrieve. Take Jimmy Carter, for instance — if he had talked last October the way he's been talking since January, I might have hesitated about wanting to give him the vote I didn't have.

Nobody, not even their worst enemies, can accuse the new leaders of Israel of this kind of hypocrisy. They have not abated by a jot their concept of the new nation that is to arise from the ashes of the Alignment. Menahem Begin, Simcha Ehrlich and the religious politicians have outlined clearly for us the shape of the Paradise to come.

Mr. Begin spelled out that our political border will be the Jordan River, and that the Arabs living to the West of it should become good Israeli citizens. Presumably, he expects them to vote for the Likud, the N.R.P. and Flatto, just like the Arabs and Druze of Galilee. The Premier-elect indicated that any trifling American objections to a startling Israeli divergence from Resolution 242 will all fall away, because Jimmy Carter was taught the Bible in Baptist Sunday School, and because our old friend, Muki Katz, is going specially to the U.S. to explain that America's only hope of containing Russia's grand imperialist design is to back Israeli annexation.

Admittedly, Carter promptly and tactlessly made a speech about having no desire whatsoever to contain Russian expansionism — something went wrong with his Baptist education, apparently, and all he wants to do to keep the Middle East off balance. But he made that speech before Muki Katz got to America to explain the position, so maybe he will still see the light.

Prophets of doom have proclaimed that Begin's new policy must result inevitably in another war. Ridiculous. The new Arab leaders — Sadat and Assad and Fahd — are far too canny to launch a war, when all they need to do is to threaten to raise the price of oil by a few cents per barrel to give Jimmy an excuse to forget his Bible lessons and whip us into line. But maybe I'm wrong — I often am — and we will get lucky and the Arabs will wage war against us, after all.

Likud supporters tell me, when I ask anxiously whether they are not worried about their sons going to war, that Mapai led us into five wars, anyway, so why shouldn't the Likud leaders have a chance to do so? Of course, most of the Mapai wars were started by the Arabs, and we were generally backed by the Americans, and we had abundant oil. Still, fighting the Arabs plus the Americans plus the Russians will make the next round a more sporting affair.

So much for the excellent foreign policy outlined in several impressive interviews by the future prime minister. It may be a coincidence that he went back into hospital after getting an ultra-confidential briefing from Shimon Peres. I hope that Shimon didn't reveal anything that upset the man.

Simcha Ehrlich's dreams, as disclosed in a Ma'ar interview, are of a Jewish state with a Jewish king, Kishinev and Elimelech Ram, were very reminiscent of those of James O'Connell and his sister, Elizabeth Fraser. On the advice of Nobel prize-winner Professor Milton Friedman, we will get labour discipline and productivity by creating a substantial well of unemployed.

Only last week James and Elizabeth were explaining the beauties of this system to Miss Gladstone. Development is to be curtailed vastly, including expenditure on education. After all, Simcha pointed out to his amused interlocutors, many good men in the good old days were products of second shift schooling in the afternoons, so why shouldn't new generations follow this excellent example? Why not indeed?

Some parents may complain that second shift teachers are notoriously worse than morning teachers, that children learn less well on hot afternoons, that truancy becomes rife, etc. etc. But they can console themselves with the reflection that the education their children are going to get is to be devoted largely to religious subjects, since education will be controlled by the Orthodox politicians in the coalition. If the children miss schooling, the parents will be spared the agony of being unable to answer questions about phyisiclerie, kashrut and misivot, their failure earning for them the scorn of their young. In any case, since these children will probably be destined to enter the well of the unemployed, or to join settlements near Nablus, morning education would be wasted on them.

Mr. Ehrlich tended to contradict himself when he outlined his plans for the civil service. He intends to cut down the number of ministries to twelve, thereby effecting colossal economies and rationalization of services. Having said this, he hastened to add that no civil servant need fear dismissal before retirement age, although no new civil servants will be taken on.

Avraham Kushnir seemed to share my bewilderment about how this plan would save us millions. True, there will be fewer cabinet ministers' families' mouths to feed, but were they really costing us all those billions? Even when they drove Volvos, in defiance of the late Pinhas Sapir? I emerged with a vision of civil servants sitting in offices without heads, reading newspapers while they wait for the years to fly by till the men reach 65, the women 60.

Having made these snide remarks about Mr. Ehrlich, I must add that I much prefer having him tell us about the economy to hearing about it from his predecessor, Yehoebea Rabinowitz. Mr. Rabinowitz is a very fine, worthy man, but he has the appearance and manner of an undertaker with a soft heart. I always felt that he came on the scene to announce a new funeral for the economy.

Simcha Ehrlich, on the other hand, has an amiable if flustered air; he reminds me of the White Queen in "Alice Through the Looking-Glass." Just as that lady cum sheep gained our sympathy, so did he; I felt that Kushnir and Ram were on his side, even when they were playing him with hard questions. They were like sheepdogs gently herding a well-loved lamb.

Some of the things he promised I liked very much, such as the abolition of the defence levy on phone calls and electricity. But I had hoped he was going to abolish VAT, which has irritated so many shopkeepers who voted Likud, but instead he hinted that he would raise it, citing the British example of over 20 per cent VAT. The British socialists and capitalists have made such a mess of their economy that I hope he will turn his eyes in another direction, and will model his VAT rate on that charged in Tahiti.

And I didn't like his manner when he talked about income tax, which I assumed he would virtually abolish for the so-called "self-employed," subjected for 29 years to savage persecution by the income tax authorities. If we are to evade those trillions through the new economies, why not abolish taxes altogether? If he does this, my thunder, they'll have my vote next time.

Ah, well, it is very early to judge; as the Likud propaganda stressed, we must give them a chance. Perhaps I have painted too black a picture, and they will turn out to be hypocrites, after all, and will continue with more or less the same safe policies.

OUR OWN politics so dominated the news that little space remains to comment on other items, but I must mention the visit of U.S. Ambassador Andrew Young to Israel's great friend, South Africa. His rush to exchange Black Power handshakes with the startled black workers at the airport made me wonder whether he had one of them after he left South Africa. Did the South Africans have a pleasant little ceremony — dropping aviation workers from planes?

Whatever the outcome for the recipients of his defiant gesture, he certainly made his point clear — America is not backing South Africa as the bastion of democracy against Soviet Imperialist designs in Southern Africa. Like us, the white South Africans are very misunderstood.

There were many good things on the story of Haim Topol, as revealed in "This is Your Life." Basically, I think that he is a marvellous actor; then I enjoyed the Horatio Alger aspect of his biography. How a poor boy from the Florentina of Tel Aviv went on to being able to toss off figures like last year's earnings $800,000, next year's $3.5m., made pleasant viewing. He does not think, in despised litot, but in dollars, greenbacks, the real stuff. His daughter, who is following in his footsteps in the Nabal Troupes is lovely, and the item about his father's visit, disguised as him, to the kibbutz, was a gem.

Best of all, I think, was the note of bitterness he injected when he referred to the envy and malice of Israelis. "This is Your Life" is always so sweet that it needs remarks like these to offset the saccharine.

FULL MARKS go to Haim Gil for his marvellous week-end programme about the Druze village that voted for Flatto. To my mind, their choice was no stranger than the choices made by hundreds of thousands of other Israelis. On another programme, Sadat was very restrained when talking about various mispronounced Israeli leaders and "the old lady" — he had obviously forgotten her name. Sclerosis? Or the brevity of fame?

On Tuesday Kippenbussel put himself on in Arabic, instead of Phyllis, thereby losing my vote. But Israel TV and Jordan TV both go to the top of the class for bringing us the European Cup Final, live.

Dear Rabbis and Balabatim and Friends,

This is my year end Rosh Hashana Report.

The Almighty is still my ONLY PARTNER in raising the funds for the building of Mikvah buildings in all the poor Kibbutzim of Eretz Yisrael.

I have now reached 231 Mikvah buildings in Eretz Yisrael. I have 4 Mikvah buildings in the U.S.A. plus 7 more new Mikvah buildings being started in the U.S.A. plus a 1st Mikvah building almost finished at "Har Zion" for the Bnei-Tsava, plus a new Mikvah building going up in the Oranges of N.J. Maplewood, Livingston Group.

The FIRST 4 U.S.A. MIKVAHs are Boro Park, Phila. Estelle Manor Vineland Mikvah, Newark, N.J. Mikvah, The 7 new U.S.A. Mikvah Buildings are North Hollywood Calif., West Hempstead, N.Y., Woodmere, Cedarhurst, Oceanside Group, West Hartford, Conn., Teaneck Mikvah Building and New Haven Conn. Mikvah Building. I have furnished all the above new Mikvah buildings with 3 sets of Mikvah building plans, a building manual, and a starting check for each new Mikvah building in the U.S.A.

The first U.S.A. Mikvah building, completed, will be another new Mikvah building covering Maplewood, Livingston and the Oranges Group, N.J.

I will start my next group consisting of 10 Mikvah buildings in the U.S.A. as soon as I hear from Rabbi Moshe Feinstein and Rabbi J.B. Solovitchik covering "Chizuk" (חזק) not money, of Mikvah buildings in the U.S.A.

The religious worker, the religious members' section of the Histadrut proposes a life of cooperation and brotherhood among all sections of the nation, and action to achieve our social ideals within the Histadrut and not outside it.

The years of the religious workers activities within the Israel labour movement justify its policy. These years are studied with great achievements, in drawing hearts closer and in disseminating the Torah, in deepening Jewish awareness, the co-sharing of workers' kitchens and providing religious requirements.

A religious section, which arouses honour and purity in its aspirations may stimulate the great spiritual powers embodied in the Israel labouring population to a spiritual renewal and a return to the sources of Judaism.

We call on the members of the Histadrut, faithful to tradition, to unite around the Religious Worker's Section, to work together for the success of the Religious Worker in the elections for the Histadrut convention and for the worker's councils.

The image and character of the nation in Israel will be determined by the deepening of Jewish awareness and by the understanding of the Jewish values between man and his place and man and his friend.

THIS WE WILL DO BY COUNSELLING AND BY PEACEFUL METHODS.

BUCHAREST. — Tourists looking for the wholesale destruction that the news media may have led them to expect as a result of the earthquake won't find much of it around here. True, there are gaps in the streets — usually the corner side of a high-rise building. There's a glimpse of winding staircases, spiralling senselessly upwards, of wallpaper flaking in endless strips. But repairs are being carried out everywhere, cracks are being cemented over. The rubble is gone. But the citizens still speak about those 40 seconds of unspeakable horror. And there are many who wear black mourning ribbons in their lapels. However, they will also tell you that such earthquakes are likely to occur only once every 40 years. Ergo, you are safe.

MAY DAY was subdued for Bucharest. No parades. "The workers have resolved to maintain a normal working day routine." But the streets were decorated with flags and bunting and there were slogans on the facades and little flags on the tops of trams and buses and pictures of Comrade Ceausescu, of Marx and Engels and Lenin.

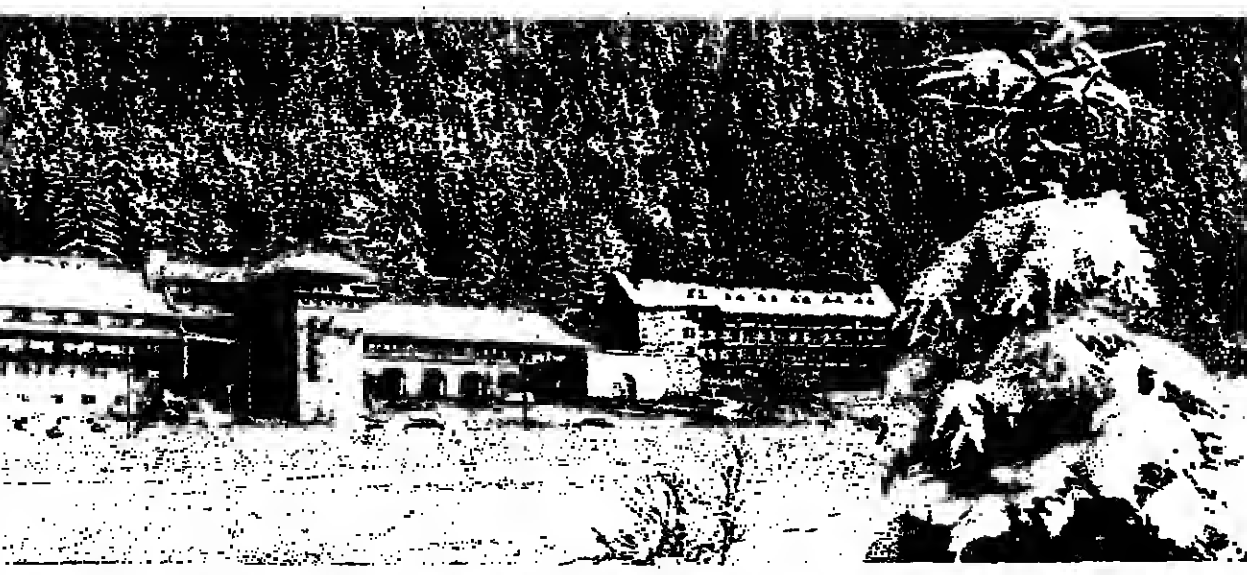

An impressive long line of private cars jams Magheru and Bulevardu Boulevard. Most are locally assembled Dacias, a Rumanian version of the Renault 12. The cars are very expensive (for Rumanians), and it is surprising that so many people seem to be able to afford one. Apparently Rumania and Israel have something in common.

FRIDAY EVENING in the Great Synagogue. To us, a delegation of Israeli journalists, the imposing dimensions of the building and its interior make it seem palatial.

Chief Rabbi Rosen is resplendent in a black robe and some sort of violet cap as a compromise between a mitre and a cantor's headgear. There is a magnificent choir and a harmonium. After a sermon in Rumanian delivered from a real pulpit, we file past the Rabbi to shake hands. I felt like kissing his ring.

RUMANIA is a poor man's Switzerland — physical beauty, excellent hotels, justly renowned cuisine, not to mention the spas. For those who say they have seen it all and especially those on tight Israeli budgets, the country is a revelation, with something for just about every taste. But if it's nightlife you're after and a pretty wench, forget it. It is, alas, good clean fun, in spite of the excellent wine and music that goes with it.

From Bucharest, we travelled to Ploesti, which aroused no more than mild curiosity and on to Sinaia, a gem set in the heart of the Bucegi plateau. This Carpathian resort is named after a monastery which in turn was named after the Sinai original by an impressed group of Rumanian pilgrims some seven or eight hundred years ago.

In Sinaia, one can see the picturesque palace King Carol had built half way up a mountain — beamed walls, neogothic turrets, cathedral windows and fancy ironwork. Hotels there with ski and cable lifts, were a visual delight. There was still skiing in May (at an altitude of just under 2,000 metres) and for those who prefer to ramble, there were special footpaths. Others came down the fast way, on their boards.

Stay away during the crowded winter and go to Brasov, ringed by resorts. It was snowing when we came to Brasov's "Pirates' Den," a forest hideout whose beauty defies description. Two "ruffians" welcomed us with drawn swords and a elab of venison. We braced ourselves with Risk Control!

David R. Marshall — an efficiency expert — recently insured his motor car with Goshen because he liked the prompt manner in which we were able to provide him with a quotation after one short telephone conversation. As far as David is concerned that's a sign of efficiency.

However, David was most impressed when he came to see us several weeks ago about insuring his new home. The Goshen underwriters were able to explain in several short sentences — the manner in which Mr. Marshall could protect his home against burglary and fire, and therefore enjoy our special "low-risk" household insurance premium.

Our underwriters believe that they understand "Risk-Control" better than most people around. After all our office at Goshen is humming away at 7.30 in the morning when most insurance underwriters are just starting up their cars.

Why not find out for yourself what "Risk-Control" and efficiency really mean.

Phone today and speak to one of our experts.

FEL AVIV STOCKS Prices up on a broad front

TEL AVIV. — The recovery of share prices continued for a third session and left most investors in an improved frame of mind for the weekend. Trading volume increased in tempo as prices moved ahead on a broad front.

Financials were firm without undue price changes taking place. Union Bank options were a strong feature as the added 10 points to an even 350. Holders of the bank's securities will be the beneficiaries of a 14 rights issue, whose terms are expected to be announced shortly. Hapalim pref., after two days of strong rise, were pushed back by 20 to 375. Mortgage Bank issues were also a firm feature.

By the time the market came to the insurance group a strong rally was in progress. Aryeh was ahead by 25 to 681 while Hasmeh backed up by 20 to 480. Sahar reached the 1,200 mark on a 40-point gain. Tzur remained unchanged at 930.

Real estate and land development issues are not as strong as on Wednesday. Aerial gained 10 to 383.5. Solel Boneh, a thinly traded issue, was ahead by 30 to 735. Property and Building continued its recent rebound and added eight to 256. Pri-Or sprinted ahead by 20 to 721.

Industrials were ahead on balance but price fluctuations were relatively small. Dubek reached the 900 mark on a 30-point advance. Cables was also better at 182. Lewin-Epstein moved by 10 to 818. Ben-Zion Textiles was "buyers only" and eventually closed out at 283 for a 15-point move. Nechustan was "sellers only" and was dropped to 950. Elit was 12 better at 477. Shemen reg. was "sellers only" and was fixed at 553.

Investment company equities sparked with goodly gains achieved across the board. Elitran at 412 registered a 17-point gain. Amiasar, returning to favour, was "buyers only" and marked up to 945. The shares recently had sold as high as 2,000. Central Trade jumped by 25 to 315. Paz Investments was nine better at 301. Discount Investments, in quiet trading, jumped by 20 to reach 310. Hapalim Investments was six better at 284 while Bank Leumi Investments was a nine point gainer at 262.

Jordan Exploration, in spite of disappointing news about new oil finds, was a "buyers only" situation and was fixed higher at 2,880. The warrants followed suit and were fixed at 2,730. Mizrahi Investments was five ahead at 263. Piryon was "buyers only" and its price was established at 584.

The small drop in the price of the Nativ investment currency was a token expression of the general disappointment at the government's enacting a "creeping devaluation" of 1.5 per cent instead of an anticipated massive devaluation.

Index-linked bonds were almost unchanged. None of the sectors invested any inclination to move in either direction. The investment community is apparently awaiting further announcements about the new government's economic policy.

The General Index of Share Prices rose by 0.99 per cent to 120.39.

Giant new U.S. transport can land on 600-metre field

By MARY HADAB
Jerusalem Post Reporter

LONG BEACH, California. — The YC-15 prototype took off from here Wednesday morning under cloudy skies for the Paris air show, carrying with it the hopes of McDonnell Douglas to be chosen as the Short Takeoff and Landing (STOL) aircraft of the future.

The YC-15, referred to fondly by its developer as "our little white bird" is an ungainly monster which incorporates several new technological features which enable it to carry twice the load of the C-130 tactical airlift plane now in use by the U.S. Air Force, but is able to land on a field half the length of that required by the C-130. It can accommodate the latest outsize tactical vehicles, including the M60 and XM1 tank or a 175-mm gun, and is able to land on rough fields, mud or sand. The plane was shown here Wednesday to a group of Israeli journalists.

McDonnell Douglas is also hoping for a big foreign market for the plane, which has already been studied by the O/C of the Israeli Air Force, Binyamin Peled. The plane was developed as McDonnell Douglas's entry in a U.S. Air Force competition, and completed its initial flight development program successfully in 1976, well within its budget.

Its main competitor is Boeing Aircraft Corporation's YC-14. An Air Force decision which plane to proceed with is scheduled by the end of this year, at which time foreign governments will be able to pursue their interest in the plane as well.

The YC-15's major selling point is its externally blown flap system, which works in this way: three large titanium flaps on each wing are lowered into the engine exhaust, deflecting the exhaust downward and increasing the circulation of air around the wing and flaps. This system doubles the lift, and thus the aircraft is able to meet the U.S. specifications for short take-off and landing.

The plane is required to land within 2,000 feet (about 610 metres), in fact, test flying has shown it can do this within 700 feet (200 metres). Douglas officials feel the simplicity of their system gives them a major advantage over the Boeing version. The thrust reverser system also protects ground troops from jet blast.

The YC-15 is a four-engine aircraft, with each engine in the range of 19,000 to 20,000 pounds of thrust, as opposed to the Boeing twin-engine version equipped with CF6 engines with 40,000 pounds of thrust. While the Boeing has slightly more power than the YC-15, the plane is intended to be a forward action aircraft, which conceivably could come under fire. "We can't imagine the Air Force choosing a plane which could lose half its power if one of its engines was hit," said one Douglas official.

The development of the prototype is part of the U.S. fly-before-you-buy programme, in which prototype development contracts were signed with both McDonnell Douglas and Boeing. Douglas is also studying a passenger application for the aircraft, a double-decker version which could be used either as an all-passenger craft or a joint passenger-freight craft, with the passengers seated in the top part, and freight — or arms — tucked underneath. The plane is well suited to civil application, since it's a wide-bodied aircraft, with low noise levels due to new generation engines, and its steep takeoff and landing, which restrict noise to the immediate vicinity. The main problem for civil use is the cost.

The prototype on its way to Paris will make three stops — in Dayton, Ohio, Newfoundland and England — before landing at Le Bourget on Monday.

Over-production of milk is scored by Bank

By SHLOMO MAOZ
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Over-expansion of dairy production at a time when the price of milk powder is falling on world markets is criticized in a Bank of Israel report to be published soon.

The rise in dairy production here last year was a continuation of that industry's growth over the last five years. In these earlier years the increased supply was absorbed by the local market, until the import of powdered milk was finally made unnecessary.

At the beginning of the 1970s production quotas had been abolished as a result of a shortage of dairy products. Farmers were given low interest loans for the expansion of their herds. This encouragement continued, despite falling prices in world markets.

Last year, however, restored dairy quotas helped to reduce the increase in the rate of production. Milk marketing is done exclusively through central dairies, which makes uncontrolled marketing impossible.

The report also criticizes the poultry industry, where farmers have continued to exceed production quotas. Because of that it was necessary to export surpluses at prices which did not even cover variable expenses, that is, sales were made at a loss.

New diamond 'club' handles about 30% of all gems here

TEL AVIV. — The New Israel Club for Commerce in Diamonds, founded three years ago, will make a concerted effort to export $100m. worth of diamonds in 1977 through its own members, Ben Zion Mountz, president of the club, said yesterday. The 400 club members will also export about $20m. through agents, he said. In 1976, its members exported directly only about $20m.

The "Club" (whose members call it "Elgar") was founded with 180 members; today it has 400 members employing 3,000 workers, and was recently recognized by the International Federation of Diamond Bourses.

(The Israel Diamond Exchange, whose building dominates the Ramat Gan skyline, has about 1,500 members; in addition, there are another 2,000 to 2,500 persons in Israel who are licensed by the Government to buy, polish and sell diamonds, but who are not organized in either of these two bodies.)

Mountz said that the members of the Club now handle and polish about 30 per cent of all diamonds in Israel. The Club was founded to help its members' buy uncut diamonds in bulk, thus lowering the purchase price, as well as to help sell the diamonds without intermediaries. It was established when Israel's diamond exports were only about $430m. a year; last year exports were about $750m, and this year they should approach the $1,000m. mark. To accommodate its increased membership, the "Club" recently bought a 700 square metre plot (for IL2m.) in Ramat Gan adjoining its existing small building. On this plot it plans to build an eight-storey building costing about IL20m. No date has been set for the work to start.

Jack and Ruth still live in the United States

Jack and Ruth Eisenberg are the kind of people who would like to make their home in Israel. For them, as well as for Israelis now residing abroad, "Tefahot", Israel Mortgage Bank Ltd., is offering a unique new plan, TMSP - Tefahot Mortgage Savings Plan. "Tefahot", a government institution, is Israel's largest mortgage bank.

TMSP savers purchase notes each month in amounts that may vary from $ 20 to $ 200. These notes pay up to 7% interest compounded annually. An additional $ 5,000 may be deposited during the first year (Once $ 5,000 has been deposited, no additional deposits need be made).

Three years after joining the plan, savers are entitled to receive a government-subsidized unlinked mortgage equal to the amount of savings (max $ 5,000). After five years, a similar mortgage equal to double the amount of savings (max $ 10,000) may be obtained. This mortgage will be in addition to any other mortgage to which the saver may be entitled.

American citizens and Israeli Residents, living in the following States, are eligible to subscribe to the Plan: Ohio, Illinois, Massachusetts, Maryland, New York, New Jersey, Florida, Pennsylvania, Colorado, California.

After Dayan's defection

AFTER THE EARTHQUAKE come the tremors. The nation had barely recovered from the Likud's stunning electoral victory a fortnight ago when it learned, to its shock and surprise, that former Defence Minister Moshe Dayan, a prime target of Menachem Begin's wrath after the Yom Kippur War, is to be appointed Foreign Minister in Mr. Begin's own Likud government.

The deal, engineered in the strictest secrecy, must have been deemed to be of advantage to both Mr. Begin and Mr. Dayan. For Mr. Begin, it signals a further weakening of what is now the Labour opposition — especially if Mr. Dayan is followed into the arms of the Likud by even a mere handful of his confirmed Labour disciples. It also means a drastic reduction in whatever bargaining power the Democratic Movement for Change retained until yesterday as a potential coalition partner.

The fact that Mr. Dayan, though highly sympathetic to Mr. Begin's foreign policy views, is not entirely identified with them, ought to be an asset rather than a liability to the next government. Some people, both at home and abroad, who are alarmed by Mr. Begin's reputation for doctrinaire extremism, might be reassured by having as the country's Foreign Minister a pragmatist of experience such as Mr. Dayan.

For Mr. Dayan, the Begin offer might well have appeared as perhaps the last opportunity of his public career. He had always been a man of action, not of oratory, and he had been candid enough to admit that cultivating his garden was not his idea of the good life. The prospect of several years of enforced idleness on the opposition benches could only have been depressing.

Moreover, his membership in the Labour Alignment had long become a mere formality. He had made it clear on numerous occasions that he felt closer in spirit to Herut's Begin than to Mapam's Talmi. In these conditions, it need not have been particularly difficult for Mr. Dayan to rationalize his acceptance of the Foreign Ministry portfolio in a Likud government with the argument that the nation needs him more than ever at this time of political decision. What his Labour colleagues might think of him, he surely could not have cared less.

The opinion of most of his colleagues was summed up early yesterday morning by Israel Kargman, the former head of the Knesset Finance Committee, who termed Dayan's move an act of political prostitution and rank treachery. This is a harsh verdict, but it is not very wide of the mark.

Mr. Dayan did, after all, consider a switch to the Likud even before the last elections. He was dissuaded from making it after receiving humble assurances from the party's leadership that there would be no cessation of any part of Judea and Samaria without another election.

If he considered the assurances inadequate, and still did not wish to join the Likud, he could have run his own list — as one loyal follower, Mordechai Ben-Porat, actually did, although without success. Mr. Dayan took the easy way. He hitched a ride onto Labour's wagon — and when the wagon got mired down, he simply jumped off it.

The least that Mr. Dayan must do now, surely, is to return his newly won seat to Labour, as Mr. Peres has already insisted. There are precedents for Knesset Members bolting their parties and forming their own factions in mid-term, but there is no precedent for an elected Member changing allegiance even before the legislature had a chance to be convened.

But even if he does surrender his Knesset seat, as some of his associates are predicting — which will not, of course, bar his taking a cabinet seat — Mr. Dayan's apostasy would have to be recorded as a most unseemly model of political behaviour. Admittedly, party affiliation in a democracy is not a Catholic marriage. But neither should it be regarded as a succession of one-night stands.

Apart from the issue of morality, however, there is the question of prudence. Was the Begin-Dayan deal really as clever as it seemed to its authors?

This high-handed manner in which Mr. Begin engineered it could not fail to have offended his Liberal colleagues — notably Arye Dulzin, who had reason to view himself as the Likud's choice for Foreign Minister. The Likud will survive, but the internal strains may well increase.

More importantly, it would be most astonishing if the DMC did not now break off for good its coalition talks with the Likud. True, the DMC was conceived as a lever of governmental power, not as a voice crying in the opposition. The itch to join in must be overpowering. But Mr. Begin's cruel snub was a clear message to the DMC that its role in his government would be only minor and insignificant. For the DMC to accept such terms would be objectionable and suicidal.

The alternative for the DMC is to form a pact with the Alignment for a new kind of change — sometime later. The time in opposition need not be wasted. It should be spent in an effort to help reform and reshape Labour itself — which was the original hope and design of many of the DMC's own leaders.

Thus a virtue may yet be made of necessity.

HE HAS BEEN sitting on the fence for years, trying to sense in which direction the winds of political opportunism were blowing. He could never be bothered with minor party matters, always waiting for others to do the groundwork for him while he would reap the benefits of political power. He would always rely on his charisma and personal appeal to pull him through any political crisis that might develop, at the same time expecting his supporters in the party to rally to his defence in time of trouble.

Thus Golda Meir's Government was brought down three years ago over his refusal to relinquish the Defence Ministry in the wake of the Agranat Commission report and the aftermath of the Yom Kippur War. In his inner heart, he probably never forgave Shimon Peres — his most loyal friend and political ally — for having agreed to take over the Defence Ministry from him. Having sat it out for three years on the backbenches of the Labour Party — a political semi-wilderness for him — he seemed determined to re-enter the highest inner forum of decision-making in an hour of destiny for Israel.

Only six weeks ago he had the entire leadership of the Labour Party practically on its knees asking him not to desert its ranks on the eve of fateful elections. In a special gesture, he was given proper reassurance by outgoing Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin that the Government would go to the polls before ceding any territory in Judea and Samaria. Yet, this did not prevent him from continuing to negotiate with Likud leader Menachem Begin until the very deadline for submitting the parties' lists of Knesset candidates. In the end he did accept a prominent place on the Labour Alignment Knesset list and campaigned for it.

Time and again he denied rumours that he might join the rival, right-wing Likud, claiming that he was "Labour" and that it was the Labour Party where he belonged despite often serious differences of opinion. Only last Sunday he wrote a serious warning note on the choices facing the Democratic Movement for Change:

"If the DMC will take part in the ousting of the Alignment, it will be responsible for bringing the right wing to power. The DMC does not have the power to turn Begin into a satellite dove of Prof. Rabinstein, nor can it instill in him the teachings of Israeli democracy (without Nahul) according to Prof. Yadin's formula. The DMC's seven conditions for joining a Likud Government can be solved in 77 different smooth formulas; but the Likud will remain the Likud."

What the voters wrought

The Likud won a mandate to govern the country, says YOSEF GOELL, but an analysis of the election returns makes clear that it did not receive a mandate to implement all of its — and the NRP's — pet policies.

THE FINAL RESULTS of last week's elections to the Ninth Knesset bear out the initial impression that the predominant factor was the massive anti-Alignment vote.

The anti-Alignment voters did not, however, shift primarily to the Likud but were scattered among a wide spectrum of parties, beginning with the Democratic Movement for Change and ranging over the Likud, Arik Sharon, Shimon Peres, the National Religious Party and the Aguda wings, and Flatto-Sharon.

The political upheaval that is about to result in the installation of a Likud-led coalition in power in place of the Labour coalition, which has ruled Israel for 29 years, was not solely the product of the shift in votes. Equally if not more important was the NRP's shift in allegiance from its traditional "historic partnership" with Labour to a hawkish Greater Israel association with the Likud.

Improbable as it may sound, an alternative coalition would still be theoretically possible: Labour (32), DMC (15), NRP (12), ILP (1), Shulamit Aloni (1). But this is completely unrealistic today because of the dominant opinion within the NRP and the complete demoralization in the Labour camp. None the less, it is a hypothetical alternative, and it should be kept in mind.

As noted, the most dramatic aspect of the elections was the mass defection — of close to 200,000 voters — from the Labour Alignment. This anti-vote could be felt throughout the country: in the upper-middle-class suburbs and neighbourhoods of the big cities the Alignment's former strongholds, where the defectors' votes went to the DMC; in the poorer quarters, where these votes went to the Likud, Arik Sharon and Flatto-Sharon; in development towns, which had always been organized by the Labour machine for the party, where the votes this time went to the Likud, Arik Sharon and Flatto-Sharon; in the established moshavim and kibbutzim of Eretz Hakvutzot Vehakibbutzim where there were impressive shifts towards the DMC.

THESE ARE the hard facts; on them, one can base intelligent guesses. Where did the DMC get its 11.6 per cent of the vote? It is quite clear that all of Shulamit Aloni's lost votes and most of the ILP's losses went to the DMC. And nearly all the rest of its votes, about 8 per cent of the total, came from the Alignment.

It would seem clear from the figures that few if any votes came to the DMC from the Likud. This would mean, among other things, that it is highly doubtful that Shmuel Tamir and the Free Centre, which he brought back, stock and barrel into the DMC, actually took many votes away from his erstwhile Likud partners.

The DMC, although it did not fully realize its hopes of getting enough votes to become the indispensable coalition partner of either the Likud or Labour, has established itself

VIEWPOINT/ARI RATH Dayan's final betrayal

"There is no such thing as just 'change.' A change is always from something into something else. If the DMC chooses to change the regime in Israel, then this change will be expressed by the fact that instead of an Alignment of the Labour parties a Likud Government will be in power. This will be the change and the real revolution which the Democratic Movement for Change will bring about."

And as to the Labour Party he wrote that if it uses the time of sitting it out in the opposition — perhaps for not too short a period — "to reorganize, to deal with itself seriously, it will recuperate and will regenerate not only as an opposition party, but as an alternative to a Likud regime."

He warned at the same time that this regenerating process of the Labour Party should not be done at the expense of allowing settlements in the West Bank. Withdrawal should not become "Labour ideology" simply to oppose the Likud.

He also referred to the precarious co-existence with the Arab population in the administered territories, in the absence of peace, to which he contributed more than anyone else in his seven years as Defence Minister:

"Formulas for a peace agreement might be interesting... but we have to give an immediate answer — and now with the rise to power of the Likud, more than ever before — to the undesirable but existing situation with which we will have to live to all our regret for a long time: living together with the Arabs in the territories in the absence of a peace settlement."

All this went by the wayside within four days. Wednesday night came the final stab in the back. In the worst hour of Israel's Labour movement, Moshe Dayan, the man born in Israel's first kibbutz settlement — Deganya — raised in Israel's first cooperative moshav settlement — Nahalal — groomed by Israel's and the Labour movement's founding father David Ben-Gurion, agreed to legitimize the country's first right-wing Government under the leadership of Menachem Begin — the man to whom everything Labour stood and stands for in Israel's history was anathema.

Dayan's innumerable pragmatism will probably not be short of arguments, attempting to justify his treacherous move, unprecedented even in Israel's unique history of political splits and upheavals. There will be talk of trying to moderate the policies of a Likud Government by restraining its nationalist dogma. There will be explanations that with Dayan as Israel's number-one negotiator in the international arena, Labour's basic policies will be safeguarded. There will be soundings of avoiding a cleavage within the nation and building a bridgehead for Labour's return to power. Political pundits will see in Dayan's move the coming of Israel's de Gaulle who has the power and authority of agreeing to far-reaching territorial compromise, his present nationalist rhetoric notwithstanding.

But the bitter and naked truth remains that Dayan's joining a Likud government has in fact burned the bridges, even with his closest associates in the Labour Party. It was an act of political opportunism which even staunch supporters of the Likud could not easily stomach.

In a way, the issues are now clearer than ever before — an outright right-wing Likud-led nationalist-religious Government will face a solid Labour-Democratic movement opposition which will have to join forces before long to bring about a regenerated Socialist-Democratic movement that will regain the confidence of the nation.

For Shimon Peres who now heads the Labour Party, it is an hour of both great personal ordeal and tremendous political challenge. It will take a great deal of courage, political wisdom and vision on his part to prevail.

firmly as the party of the middle-class centre.

In this respect, the earlier intimation provided by the results of the DMC's internal elections have been borne out entirely by the general election. Not only has the DMC become the major centre party but, depending on the results of the forthcoming Histadrut elections, and on the degree of demoralization and fragmentation within Labour, it could either merge with major parts of Labour or supplement it in the centre to left-of-centre of Israel's political spectrum.

SINCE ELECTION DAY, the NRP has been ecstatic over the results of its campaign for "a newer, cleaner NRP," claiming that its new image did the trick of winning two additional Knesset seats. A closer look at the voting figures, however, makes such a claim seem questionable.

The NRP's gains were apparently part of the larger phenomenon of defection from the Alignment. What would tend to support this view is the fact that the "unreconstructed" Aguda Yisrael and Poalei Aguda increased their share of the vote by even more than the face-lifted NRP.

The explanation lies in the fact that the religious parties have always managed to garner barely half the votes of the Orthodox population. Half of the Orthodox population apparently votes on issues other than religion. But there is constant flux at the margins, with a certain number of Orthodox voters shifting between religious and secular parties.

This time a substantial number of Orthodox voters shifted back to the religious parties as part of the mass desertion from Labour. In this regard, one should remember that the NRP has now succeeded in returning to the strength it had up to 1973.

THE FATE of Shelli is even more interesting. It is difficult to think of any other political grouping, with such articulate members, that has had a similar opportunity to impress its opinions on the populace. And yet the present election results indicate that the "Peace Camp" has lost rather than gained votes.

In 1973, the groups now included in Shelli ran separately under the Moked and Meri (Uri Avneri) lists, and totalled over 82,000 votes. This time they won only 27,000, and there is good reason to believe that these figures indicate the true limits of the power of the "Peace Camp."

In the Arab sector, the Democratic Front (a front for the Communist Rakah) did raise its proportion of the Arab vote to above 50 per cent, but its showing was much weaker than that predicted by its own backers and by pessimists in the Jewish parties. Apparently, the major factor at work in the Arab sector was a penchant for second thinking, which resulted in many Arabs not voting. Accordingly, the participation figures for Arab voters dropped from the highs of close to 90 per cent they had reached in past elections.

And last but not least, Flatto-Sharon. He won 35,000 votes, which would have entitled him to two Knesset seats had he had a Number Two on his list. One gets the impression that had his henchmen tried just a little harder, Flatto-Sharon would have had little trouble in getting Number Three into the Knesset.

Many of us feel dejected — and rightly so — by Flatto-Sharon's election, but it should not stop us from examining how it was done.

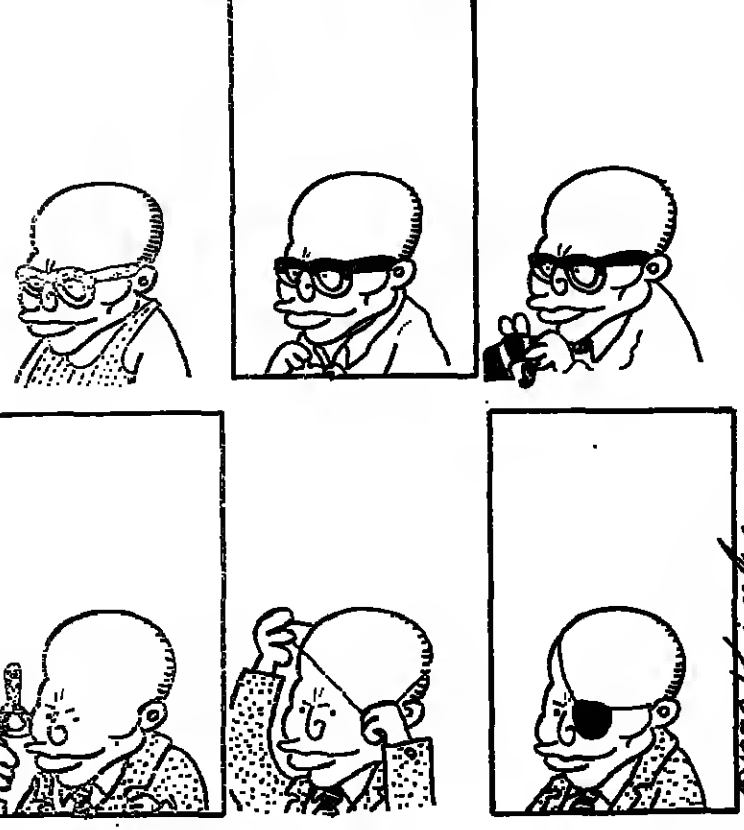

APPARENTLY, he was astute enough and persuasive enough to hire such a vote-manipulator as Yaacov Halfon, who had performed similar services for the Alignment in previous elections. The trick is not to buy the thousands of votes needed, for that would be exorbitantly expensive, but to seek to enlist the support of ethnic and communal vote-farmers in the last remaining bastions of bloc-voting in Primitive Israel.

One should, however, add the fact that one or two for Flatto-Sharon up in nearly every ballot box even in many kibbutzim. An additional indication, if one were needed, of the nature of the protest vote in these elections.

Have the elections granted a mandate to any given party? Yes, and no. There can be no argument that the clear rejection of the Alignment and the elevation of the Likud to the status of largest party does constitute a mandate for its leaders to govern Israel. It is a far cry, however, from constituting a mandate for the implementation of some of the Likud's and the NRP's pet projects — either in foreign affairs or on the domestic front.

The Likud has won a mandate to govern. It must still win, by its actions while in power, the confidence of the people.
